Course Description

This semester's Social and Economic History of the Middle East course is organized around the theme of dis(possessed) subjects and dis(possessed) spaces. It does not aim to provide a comprehensive survey of theories of dispossession. Instead, over the course of the semester we will follow key routes into the dialectics of possession and dispossession, considering in particular how models of imperial/colonial and post-colonial urban and rural life are premised on dispossession of certain subjects who are at the same time violently excluded from the national and colonial projects. The task of this course is to interrogate how norms of property are established and concretized, but also challenged from different historical and geographical vantage points. Citizenship, violence and property, then emerge as the three main keywords in this interrogation.

Requirements:

- Active participation in classroom discussions (20 %).
- Three position papers with one presentation, 3-5 pages in length (40 %).
- One research paper, 10 pages in length (due at the end of the semester) (40 %).

Please, familiarize yourself with a map, timeline, and glossary. A variety of Middle East maps are available at:
